What I Need to Know

Hello learner! You are now on the second quarter of learning the concepts in this subject, Understanding Culture, Society and Politics. This module was designed and written with you in mind. Here, you will explore the forms and functions of state institutions. You will also be introduced to the different forms of non-state institutions and how they work as components of cultural, social and political institutions.

Instructions to the facilitator

As a facilitator or a knowledge support source of a learner, you are encouraged and expected to do the following:

- To establish rapport with learner and to gain their trust and confidence;
- To guide the learner understands the concepts, skills and processes given;
- To assist or coach the learner in accomplishing the required activities;
- To help the learner develop his academic potentials to cope with and acquire the essential competencies and to manifest 21st century skills prescribed in the K to 12 curricula; and
- To maintain a record of progress of the learner.

Instructions to the learner

As a learner, you are expected to do the following:

- To abide, respect and maintain good relationship with your learning facilitator at all times;
- To be in constant contact with your facilitator or teacher for assistance on concepts unclear to you;
- To be honest in answering the activities, and to follow the prescribed home learning schedules and learning plans;
- To utilize your full potentials and accomplish the required activities to the best of your abilities;
- To read each direction/instruction carefully;
- To answer the pre assessment first before doing the other activities;
- To use other sheets of papers in writing your answers in all the required activities that you will do;
- To take care of the module by keeping it neat and free from tears; and
- To return this module to your facilitator or teacher.

After accomplishing the activities in this module, you will be able to demonstrate understanding on;

These are the forms of state and non-state institutions which will be discussed in this module.

What Is It

The lesson in this module focuses on the forms and functions of state and non-state institutions.

What is a State Institution?

- State institutions are those endorsed and supported by the government using public funds collected from exercising its power to tax. There are different institutions created within the state and are primarily concern with the welfare and interest of the whole community.
- Since a state has a government that manages its affairs, state institutions are also referred to as government institutions or public institutions.

Forms and Functions of State Institutions

Donisthorpe (1889) has identified the functions of a state as ranging from administration of justice, the maintenance of order, the defense of the country against external threat, and the collection and management of revenue for these purposes. He also recognizes the idea that the state can carry out noble means of improving the quality of life of its citizens. For instance, the state can allocate more budget to disaster mitigation projects to lessen the impact of calamities especially to poor communities.

Here are some of the forms of state institutions, their functions and the government agencies created for such.

Form	Function	Government Agencies
Education	ensuring access to and improving the quality of education	• Department of Education (DepEd) • Commission on Higher Education (CHED) • Technical Education and Skills Development Authority (TESDA)
Financial Regulation	maintaining the stability of the financial system in the country	• Department of Finance (DoF) • Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP) • Insurance Commission (IC) • Bureau of Treasury (BoT)
Health	ensuring access to public health	• Department of Health (DOH) • Philippine Health Insurance Corporation (PHIC) • Food and Drug Administration (FDA) • Commission on Population (POPCOM)

National Defense	responsible for guarding against external and internal threats to peace and security in the country	• Armed Forces of the Philippines (Philippine Army, Philippine Navy, Philippine Air Force)
Social Welfare	responsible for the protection of the social welfare of rights of Filipinos and to promote the social development.	• Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) • National Anti-Poverty Commission (NAPC) • National Council on Indigenous People (NCIP)

Non-state institutions

Non-state institutions are those owned by private individuals. Their concern is mostly that of individual welfare or that of a group of individuals.

1. Banks

Banks are financial institutions playing a great role in the economic growth of a nation. Banks serve as intermediaries between those with excess funds and those who need funds. Banks accept deposits from individuals who view these as their savings or investments. Meanwhile, businesspeople go to banks to borrow money to grow their business.

While majority of banks in the country are privately owned, there are few which are owned by the state. Apart from performing specialized functions, these government-owned banks serve as depository of the state from which payment of salaries of public officials and other expenditures are drawn.

Government Banks
• Land Bank of the Philippines • Development Bank of the Philippines • United Coconut Planters Bank • Al-Amanah Islamic Investment Bank of the Philippines

2. Corporations

The Corporation Code of the Philippines define a corporation as an artificial being created by operation of law, having the right of succession and the powers, attributes and properties expressly authorized by law or incident to its existence.

Corporations are organizations created by people known as shareholders or stockholders. A corporation is an artificial person created by operation of law. It takes a personality that is distinct and separate from the shareholders or stockholders.

Having an artificial personality means that a corporation is accorded certain rights and privileges similar to that of a natural person such as owning property in its name and having the right to sue and be sued.

A corporation can be established for profit or non-profit purposes. The majority of corporations you see around you were created for profit objectives. The businesses you see at the town proper selling variety of goods and services are mostly owned and operated by corporations. The non-profit ones were created for educational, religious or charitable purposes. Examples of this are schools, orphanages and home for the aged and the homeless.

Corporations contribute to the development of economic activities through efficient and effective production and distribution of goods and services.

3. Cooperatives

The Cooperative Development Authority (CDA) defines cooperative as an autonomous and duly registered association of persons, with a common bond of interest, who have voluntarily joined together to achieve their social, economic and cultural needs and aspirations by making equitable contributions to the capital required, patronizing their products and services and accepting a fair share of risks and benefits of the undertaking in accordance with the universally accepted cooperative principles.

A cooperative is an enterprise established by members who contribute money to a common fund called share capital. Members are joint owners of the cooperative. The members are also the primary clients of the cooperative as they should be the first to patronize the products and services of their cooperative. At the end of the year, the profit of the cooperative is distributed equitably among its members depending on their capital. What are the common services of a cooperative? In farming communities, a farmer's cooperative is established to assist farmers plant, harvest, process and sell their products by providing needed machinery and infrastructure. In cities, we commonly see credit cooperatives. Here, loans for productive and providential purposes are extended to members.

Cooperatives are very similar to corporations in almost all aspects. Membership in both are voluntary. Both organizations require members or shareholders to contribute money known as their share capital. The amount contributed is basically the basis for profit distribution in an equitable manner.

Both organizations has a Board of Directors in charge of policymaking. They are elected by popular votes of all the members. The difference lies in the way members the Board of Directors are elected. For cooperatives, one member is entitled to one vote only regardless of capital contribution. Meanwhile, for corporations, the number of votes is proportionate to the number of shares a member has.

While corporations are created either for profit or non-profit objectives, cooperatives are for profit only.

4. Trade Unions

Trade unions, labor unions or labor organizations are groups of workers within a particular workplace. Their aim is to advance the interest of their members or the workers in general. They negotiate with management or their employer for favorable benefits such as fair wage, additional benefits and good working condition among others. Trade unions are common in large companies employing hundreds of employees.

5. Transnational advocacy groups

These are self-organized groups undertaking voluntary actions in several countries. These groups work within a global network to address global concerns ranging from environmental (e.g. pollution) to political (e.g. corruption and human rights). Advocacy groups are limited to just serving as pressure groups influencing the way policymakers and implementers craft and implement laws and policies.

There is one advocacy group operating in 55 countries. The group challenges governments and corporations to take actions in safeguarding the environment. While another advocacy group reports and publishes corruption perception index and gives recommendation to heads of countries for them to take actions.

6. Development agencies

Development agencies are non-profit entities established to foster the cooperation between the public sector, the private sector and civil society towards sustainable development.

Development agencies work mostly in depressed and underdeveloped areas or regions in the country. For development works to be successful, there must be an engagement of the whole community and local resources are utilized.

One private development agency in the Philippines partners with homeless people in the building and construction of their houses.

7. International organizations

Mingst defined an international organization as an institution drawing membership from at least three states, having activities in several states, and whose members are held together by a formal agreement or a treaty.

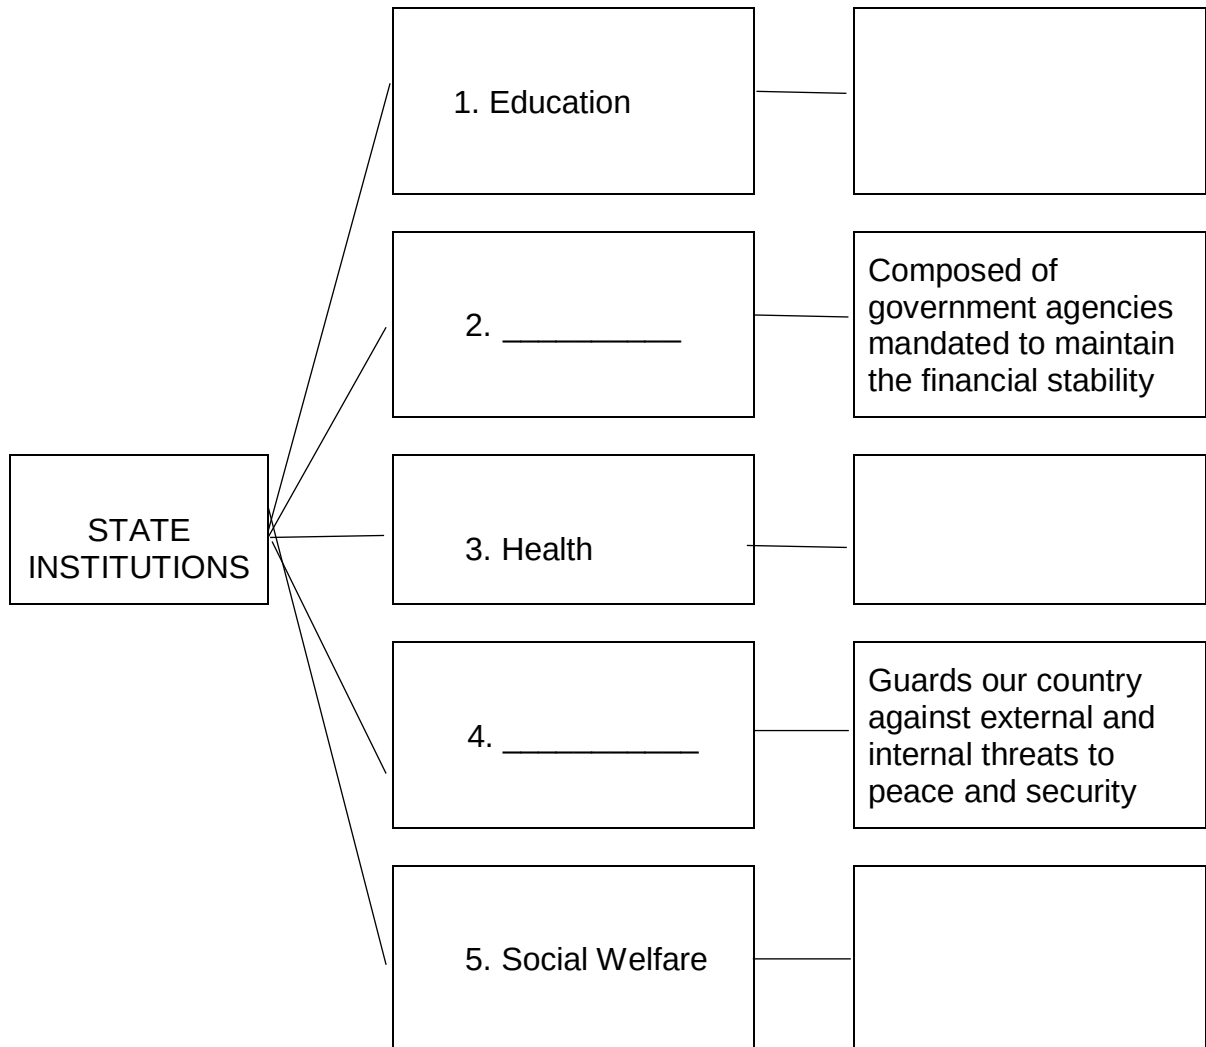

International organizations serve many diverse functions, including collecting information and monitoring trends, delivering services and aid (e.g., the World Health Organization), and providing forums for bargaining (e.g., the Association of South East Asian Countries ASEAN) and settling disputes (e.g., the World Trade Organization).

Our country has been a member of several international organizations such as the United Nations (UN), the ASEAN, the World Trade Organizations and the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) to name a few.

Additional Activity

Activity: Collaboration between state and non-state institutions

Directions: The primary objective of private corporations is to generate income through production and distribution of goods and services. However, corporations by law have to undertake programs or projects in the areas of education, environment, poverty alleviation, disaster management, and others, as part of their corporate social responsibility. As a student, suggest a program or project that you could submit to any non-state organization to undertake or implement in helping the development of your school. Prepare a project proposal following the simple format given:
